THE CURRENT AND GLOBAL AFFAIRS REVIEW

Responsibilities & Application Requirements

Executive Editors

Responsibilities:

Executive Editors are expected to manage between two and four Staff Writers, revising pitches and drafts. Editors are expected to not only revise grammar, spelling, organization and structure, but also to ensure the veracity of all information presented and the use of correct citations. Editors will challenge their Writers to formulate more precise theses, clarify their arguments, and develop nuanced pieces. Editors are expected to occasionally submit their own pieces for publication and reach out to guest contributors.

Application:

Executive Editors will be expected to display strong editing and writing skills. Applicants are given two (2) pieces to edit and fact-check (these are linked on the website's Application page). Applicants will also be asked to submit one writing sample (500-word limit) on a topic of their choice. This can take the form of an opinion piece or expository article and can be an extract of a longer piece.

The Directors and Managing Editors will independently review the three pieces, then inform candidates about whether they have been selected for an interview.
